videos on the rights and responsibilities of students, see the Edge Trail series: The Impact of Academic Freedom: Breaking the Peer Pressure... the Slaves Rights and Responsibilities of Students: The students claimed that the principal and teacher did nothing to prevent the rape. They said the only action taken was to transfer the students to different classes and the students continued to make sexually-based comments and conduct. The students claimed that the principal ignored repeated complaints by the teacher and the teacher continued to allow the students to sexually harass the students. The lawsuit claimed that principals were responsible for creating a hostile educational environment because of the school's code of silence. The students claimed that the principal violated their civil rights by failing to prevent their rape by the teacher and by failing to provide an adequate response to the student's complaints about the assault. The lawsuit claimed that students were subjected to harassment, intimidation, and assault for being gay. The students claimed that the school responded by changing its dress code, moving the gay-straight alliance to a different floor, and banning gay clubs. The students claimed that these actions punished them for being gay. The students claimed that the school had a history of anti-gay harassment, bullying, and violence. The students claimed that the school's disciplinary system allowed teachers to violate the rights of students. The students claimed that the school had a history of teachers abusing students. The students said the abuse included denying students the right to conduct hearings and punish students without the consent of the students' parents.
